In an ongoing effort to provide financial funding options for families, Universal Health Services (UHS) announced a program this week whereby parents can extend students tuition payments and in many instances access interest free loans direct through UHS. "This is yet another means of working with families in need. This program allows us to maintain our high level of services while providing families a number of financial options that may fit with their personal circumstances" - Chris Ankney, Ascent Executive Director.

Families working with Ascent can also access our Family Advocate who specializes in securing insurance reimbursement. Ascent's full Joint Commission accreditation, along with the numerous state licensures, enables many families to receive some health insurance reimbursement for their child's stay in the Ascent program.
